

PROTECTING YOUR PAPERS

Government
Publications

D

CAR
AK
-Z 024

In the past, many historically valuable papers have been lost or destroyed through negligence and ignorance of their historical value, through fires and other disasters. The Public Archives seeks to prevent or minimize such losses. Even partially destroyed documents can often be saved for posterity.

Since 1872, the Public Archives of Canada has dedicated itself to the preservation of papers of persons and organizations of national historical importance.

One of the chief functions of the Public Archives is the preservation of documents. Frail and discoloured documents may be restored and preserved for future generations by such sophisticated conservation methods as lamination and deacidification. Very valuable documents may also be bound to ensure even greater protection.

The Public Archives also makes papers available for research. Documents are arranged and sorted and placed in sturdy boxes specially designed for the purpose. Most units of papers are open to all researchers but some are accessible only to those who have received permission to view them from the donor or his authorized agent. Papers of a contemporary nature are often restricted to protect the privacy of persons who are still living.

Some of the more frequently consulted and more precious papers are microfilmed to protect them against the hazards of frequent use, thus also making them available to researchers across the country through inter-library loans services.

In its continuing search for historical papers, the Public Archives requests and invites the assistance of all Canadians, and others, who know of the existence of such papers.

Further information about the policies and programmes of the Public Archives may be obtained by writing to:

Public Archives of Canada
395 Wellington Street
Ottawa, Ontario
K1A 0N3

P.A.C.
CANADA

Historical evidence is found in all types of papers

3 1761 11549672 1

©
Supply and Services Canada
Ottawa, 1976
Cat. No.: SA2-90/1976